The Democratic Press Makes a Vain Attempt to Destroy the

in Judge Guffy's Integrity.

His Friends, Irrespective of

CAN REEVES EXPLAIN.

[GREEN RIVER REPUBLICAN.]

WM. SMALL AND WM. SMALL BY HIS

NEXT FRIEND T. F. SMALL, M'RS.

AGAINST

W. L. REEVES and others, Defts.

E. H. PORTER, Adm'r of Jacob, M'rs.

Against

B. L. D. GUFFY, Del't.

Many of the Democratic papers in this district, and out of it, have published with great gusto, a suit for forty-five dollars brought against

Judge Guffy, in Bowling Green, since

he became a candidate for Judge of the Court of Appeals hence we republish an article of last week and will now give a further sketch of the suit of Small against Reeves.

In this suit it is charged, in substance, that Wm. Small has been incapable of doing business. That he inherited several thousand dollars worth of land from his father's estate.

That in 1885 the defendant, Reeves,

well knowing the incapacity of said

Small, and having the full confidence of said Small, having obtained it

while acting as his confidential adviser, and attorney, and with the full knowledge aforesaid and under circumstances aforesaid, defendant

Reeves did induce and cause said Wm. Small to execute to said Reeves a mortgage in the sum of two thousand and five hundred and sixty-six dollars, when said Small did not owe said Reeves any sum of money, and sometime since September

1886, defendant Reeves procured a sale of said land and the same was sold under a judgment of the Todd

Circuit Court, without any one being appointed to defend for said Small and Small's land, or enough of it, was sold to pay Reeves claim, then amounting to $3,750.40. Plaintiff prays that the sale of land be set aside and that he be allowed to defend the mortgage suit and that his land

be restored to him and if the land be not restored to him, that he have judgment against Reeves, Coleman

& Gill defendants, for $4,380. from the time the lands were sold.

Judge Reeves denies the allegations of the plaintiffs petition, and in the wind up of his answer says in substance: That more than five years

had elapsed after the mortgage, etc.,

and after the judgment and sale of the land, wherefore the defendant

It sometimes happens that public men neglect to pay their debts, but Judge Guffy is not of that class, hence we publish what his neighbors say of him in that regard. Read the statements following this article.

No one need be surprised at anything the Democratic papers may publish, especially those of the Reeves ring. They would not hesitate to publish that Washington was a traitor and that Benedict Arnold was a patriot, or that Christ betrayed Judas instead of being betrayed by him, if
by such statements they could help their sinking cause. If the Times would publish Judge Guffy's Greenback and People's Party speeches, its readers would get better reading than they are used to, although some of them were wrong in some respects.
The Republican party was well acquainted with Judge Guffy's history
long before he was nominated.

The Republicans know he is capable, honest and fair, and is a good Republican, and is going to be elected.

The Park City Times, of last week,
made a great blow about E. H. Porter, Administrator of Mr. Jarboe's estate suing Judge Guffy for $45, which is so far from the truth that it needs no notice. The facts are that in 1892, Mr. Jarboe was employed to make a verbal report of a speech to be made by Mr. Guffy in September 1892.

Mr. Jarboe came down here with two others and they all professed to take down the speech and Mr. Jarboe, as part of his contract was to make out and furnish Mr. Guffy a complete copy, which he never did do, but instead sent a paper full of errors and nothing more than a feeble attempt at reporting the substance of the speech and of course Guffy refused to pay for it; and Jarboe recognizing that he was not entitled to anything made no attempt to collect during the long period he lived afterwards. But after Porter was made Adm'r. it occurred to him that he might punish Guffy and make a stir in the election.

A good many years ago Porter sued
Mr. Herald in this county for some coal interest and by some means got a judgment. Afterwards some further litigation ensued between some one else and Mr. Herald and Herald employed Mr. Guffy to defend that suit and in doing so Guffy learned the previous judgment was erroneous and appealed the Porter case for Herald and it was reversed by the Court of Appeals and the costs etc. fell on Porter, hence his personal as well as political spleen against Guffy.

It very often happens that men are sued by Administrators of dead men on contracts and claims that are not just and often make men pay unjust claims because a living man can not be a witness as to his dealings with a dead man.

No man's reputation as a fair man
and debt paying citizen stands higher than Judge Guffy's, as the statements
published herewith show.

The coarse remarks of the Times-Gazette made in regard to Mr. Helm, of this county, may have contributed to his defeat in the Democratic Convention, but coarse remarks about Judge Guffy will not defeat him.

Hear the Times' man in the Weekly
of July 4th: "He (Helm) would rattle around in Mr. Goodnight's shoes like a pumpkin seed in a bladder." Among the able men in the halls of the national Congress he would be a nonentity too small to be seen with the naked eye." "Mr. Helm came into prominence as a political highwayman."

We guess Guffy's suit would rattle around in this suit of Reeves like a mustard seed in a hoghead.

We, the undersigned citizens of Morgantown, Ky., say that we have been well acquainted with Judge B.
L. D. Guffy for many years and cheerfully state that his reputation as to his personal business and his promptness to pay all his debts is of the very highest order. He is not a rich man but for many years has owned considerable property in this Town liable to execution.

We do not mean by this statement that we favor the election of Mr. Guffy but make it because it is true. We will vote as we please. Morgantown,

all this time I have been well ac-

business man, and no more prompt be found than Judge Guffy has been during all these years.

S. H. TANNER.
We have examined the records of our offices for many years past and there is no record of any suit against Judge B. L. D. Guffy ever having been instituted in our court during that period. He is extremely prompt and careful to pay all debts that he contracts. His personal credit, his fairness in business and his promptness to pay and fulfill his contracts is beyond question here.

many years.

No man's personal credit or prompt-stands higher than Judge Guffy's.

The Hon. John W. Lewis, Repub-

Fourth Congressional District will address the people at the following
times and places:

Hartford, Saturday Sept. 15, at 1

McHenry, at night.

Brandenburg, Monday Sept. 17, at 1

cussed.

Retorted to his family.
Who any the clouds of life have not a silver lining? Look at little year old Grover Reynolds, Watson, Ill. His father, Daniel W. Reynolds, after describing the little sufferer's long illness, continues: "Finally a gravel was forced into the urethra and remained there producing blood poisoning and dropping effusions. He was treated by a council of eminent physicians. They made incisions to let the water out and finally properly advised an operation, but confessed the little sufferer was so weak death would likely result. I refused and began giving him
Dr. Fennell's Kidney and Bladder
Cure. Before one bottle had been entirely taken the stone had become so disinfecting by the remedy that it passed out of itself and the child is well and sound to-day. This shows its power in dissolving stone. It is equally powerful for good in all kidney diseases.
Money returned if satisfaction not given. Take a bottle home to-day.

AN AWFUL FIX.

It was Kitty who first suggested to me that her prescription was not working well. As soon as she spoke I was bound to admit it. I had imagined that Jack would easily get over his unfortunate attachment; I expected that, after a few quiet weeks with us, he would forget Clara Wilkinson and her disgraceful treatment of him.

"He is getting no good at all here," she said most positively. "In his own interest I must ask you to send him away."
"The girl has spoiled his whole life!" I cried, angrily.
Kitty looked at me for a moment,
but said nothing.

"I suppose you are right. He would be better in a livelier place."
"Of course he would, you dear old stupid," said Kitty.
I did not see that I had been stupid.

"There is nothing to distract his thoughts here," I said.
"Will you speak to him, then?"
asked Kitty, anxiously.
She was very much in earnest.
"A woman does these things so delicately and tactfully," I suggested.

"Oh, I couldn't think of it,
Robert," said Kitty, blushing.
I admired her delicacy.
He was pacing up and down the gravel walk, hitting at his frowns with his stick, and smoking one of my cigars. When I joined him and linked my arm through his he started.

"Jack," said I, "wouldn't you be better away from here? Come, you know what I mean. You are no great hand at a secret."
"I—I," he began, stammering,
and in great confusion.
"I know all about it," said I, encouragingly. "I thought you'd get good out of the place, but it's clear you haven't—quite the contrary. You want to see new things and new people and forget this—I paused for a word, and ended "this unhappy mistake of yours."

"Upon my honor, you are a good fellow," he exclaimed. "I don't know another man who would have treated me as you have," and he covered his eyes with his hand.
"Oh, nonsense! It's nothing. I hope I'm always willing to do my friends a turn. But it's no use, is it? It gets worse and worse."

"I'll go," he said with a sigh; "I won't stay a minute. After what you say I couldn't. And, old man, I don't know how to thank you. Many fellows would have taken the way I have been going on badly; most would—"

"Oh, we made allowance for you.
Young men mustn't be judged too
harshly."
"But you're a true friend. It makes me feel bad, I can tell you,
Bob."
"Oh, you'll soon forget it when you're on the move."
"I'll try. By Jove, I will!" he exclaimed, earnestly.

"Do; it only needs a little resolution, because, between ourselves,
you know, you oughtn't to be inconsolable."
"Eh?"
"In my opinion, Jack, you've had an escape. And you can take my word for it. Remember, I know the lady pretty well."

"Oh, you mustn't say a word against her," he protested; "she's been all that's good, and kind, and—"
"Of course, you say that," I interrupted, impatiently. "I suppose you're bound to it, but it won't go down with me. If over there was a heartless, worthless jade—"
He started away from me.

"Bob!" he cried.
But I was determined he should hear the unvarnished truth.
"If ever woman," I pursued,
"led a young fellow on deliberately,
wickedly, never meaning anything except to get him in her toils and then turn him adrift with a laugh—
that's what she meant with you. Oh,
I know her—no one better!"
The unhappy young man turned pale and his lips trembled.

I shook hands. He was much moved and I didn't wish to appear cold.
"I shall go straight," he repeated.
"To-morrow morning will do."
"No, to-night; the next train. And you—must stay here!"
"Of course I must stay here," I said, staring in my turn.

"It's bad for me, old chap," he said, laying a hand on my shoulder,
"but, by Jove, what must it be for you?"
"Formel!" I exclaimed. "What in thunder do you mean?"
"That woman!" he exclaimed;
"and how you kept it up! One would think to see you—well, it is brave.
It would kill me in a month. It's brave, that's what it is!"

"What are you talking about, lad?
I haven't spoken to her for three years."
"Except before strangers! Good heavens!"
"Not at all. I haven't—"
"Hush! here she comes! I—I can't meet her again!"

I turned around and—behold my wife. With a gasp I fell back a step.
Jack tore past Kitty and vanished through the open window of the drawing-room.
"Well, was he reasonable?" asked Kitty.

I could say nothing.
"I hope you were gentle with him.
He is a nice boy, though a particularly silly one. He meant no harm,
Bob."
"Was—was he?" I stammered.
"What the dickens does it mean?"
"Only that he has quite forgotten Clara Wilkinson, and—"

"Well!"
"And that you have got rather a nice wife," she whispered. "Did you say anything about me?"
I looked at her for a moment.
"Say anything about you?" I repeated. "Why?"

"Oh, I didn't know whether he was very sorry at the thought of leaving us," she stammered, flushing.
"Of course he was."
"What a foolish boy he is to fall
in love with a woman who cares
nothing for him, and who, besides—"
"That woman should deem herself lucky to have won his esteem," I cried.

"But she doesn't," said Kitty, softly. "How can she?"
"Is there a better fellow alive?" I demanded.
"Yes."
"Who?"
"You."
"Pooh! What have I to do with it?"

"A great deal, surely."
"Why, I am not in the position to stand between Jack and his love."
"Oh, indeed?" pouting.
"Of course not. If I could lead him to the arms of the woman he loved I would do so with a glad heart. But you say he has forgotten Clara Wilkinson utterly?"
"I am sure that he has."

"I am glad of it. I would rather see him in love with any woman
than her."
"Why, you foolish old fellow!" exclaimed my wife. "I really believe you don't know who the new love is."
"I don't."
"Listen," she said, laying one hand appealingly upon my arm.
"You dear old fellow, I thought you knew all about it. Now, don't interrupt me once until I have told you all about it. Jack came here with a sore, bleeding heart. Thinking constantly of the bliss he had lost, he began to watch our happiness. Suddenly he made a startling discovery. He found that he was in love with another woman. That woman was I. But he was a loyal friend, and I a true, loving wife, who thought her husband the best, truest and noblest of men. Of course, you understand that he didn't tell me that he had made such an awful discovery, but trust a woman to find out that a man is fond of her."

JUDGE GUFFY continues to grow in popularity, and friends come every day to his banner. Being a man of the people, realizing and recognizing their needs, his canvass meets with unostentatious favor, and the weak attempt of the opposition to prejudice his interests only strengthens his cause.

To say that such a man as John W. Lewis is not able to meet a man of such ordinary ability as that of Mr. Montgomery, is the sheerest nonsense. He has made it impossible for Mr. Lewis to meet him, and yet wishes to play the part of a hero when refused. This is the height of impudent cowardice.

LAST week Vermont gave a Republican majority with an increase of 10,000. Now comes glorious old Maine this week with a 37,000 snow under for Democracy. These are but straws which can be safely taken as an indication of the stroke which will befall the enemies of good government in November all over the country. Watch Kentucky and the Fourth Congressional district.

THE Democrats are hard pressed when, after being driven to the wall by their own reckless administration of National and State affairs, and seeing defeat staring them in the face, they go about trying to besmirch the good name and reputation of Republican candidates by having petty lawsuits brought against them. We give from the Green River Republican this week a complete refutation of the malicious charge so slyly made by the opposition, and also a little history which the people would like to hear friend Reeves explain.

EVERYWHERE the canvass of the Hon. John W. Lewis awakens the healthiest enthusiasm. His recent trip through Hardin and Breckinridge counties has been attended with the most gratifying results. It is regretted by Republicans and Republicans alike, that Mr. Montgomery's absolute refusal to extend those courtesies due one gentleman from another makes it impossible for a joint discussion of the political issues of the day. Mr. Montgomery expected and desired no joint discussion. He knew that because of his own act he would be refused by Mr. Lewis and the Republicans, and merely asked a division in order to make capital out of a refusal he knew he would receive, and that, too, by reason of his own conduct.

THE Democratic papers say that the good effect of the new tariff bill was almost instantaneous in Berlin, Frankfurt, Chemnitz and other export centers of Germany. Yet they fail to tell how this in any way benefits American workmen, or how it gives the American farmers any better markets for their produce to feed these workmen. Wouldn't it have been much nicer if these sheets could have truthfully called attention to the resumption of our large American manufacturers in the same line of business as those in Germany, with a great demand for workmen, and as a consequence of this general opening up of business that the demand for farm and garden products was greater than ever before, and that, too, at advanced prices? Yes, that would have been glorious news, but when, oh! when—

People who live in new countries are liable to be prostrated by malarial fevers. Inhabitants of cities, by reason of bad drainage and unwholesome odors, suffer from similar diseases. Ayer's Ague Cure is warranted a specific for all malarial poisons.

HARDINSBURG.

Hon. John W. Lewis, Republican Candidate for Congress, Addresses an Enthusiastic Crowd of Voters.

The New Game Law Requires Farmers to Shoot Partridges, Quails, etc.

HARDINSBURG, Ky., Sept. 10. The new Kentucky Statutes, compiled by Barbour and Carroll, and printed by the Courier-Journal Co., are better than the old ones. They are quite convenient for the legal fraternity; are well arranged, well printed and quite well indexed.

Chairman John Monarch, of the Democratic Committee of this county, has arranged a list of appointments for the Democratic county candidates. They will begin their speaking tour on the second of October at Stephensport. Republican candidates are invited to meet them on the stump, and will probably accept the invitation.

Messrs. Green and Mayor, of Falls of Rough, are here attending the Breckinridge Normal College under Prof. Shacklett.

Miss Ora Alexander was in town last week visiting friends.

Miss Mary E. Bowmer left last Saturday in company with Miss Anna Gardiner. Miss Gardiner goes to Barboursville to teach in Union College. Miss Bowmer goes to Ashland to teach music in one of the schools at that place.

If the people of Grayson county are not posted on the tariff question it won't be the fault of the Grayson Eagle. That Republican sheet is giving out yards of tariff editorials. It states nothing but facts and though they be perhaps a trifle dry, yet they are true and cannot be refuted by Democracy.

Congress has adjourned. We will soon be rid of another stench in the nostrils of the people. We refer to the Democratic primary in the Seventh Congressional District of Kentucky.

Hon. Chas. Blandford and Judge Johnson, of Lebanon, were in town Monday with Hon. John W. Lewis. So also was Mr. W. A. Smith, of Holt, this county.

Mrs. Fannia Haswell and Mr. Ed Haswell and wife, of Circleville, O., are in town the guests of Mr. John P. Haswell, Sr.

Miss Katie Eskridge will teach for a while in the public school at this place this fall.

Superintendent Driskell has appointed Messrs. Allen Kincheloe and Sam Pate as the County Board of Examiners.

Hon. John W. Lewis spoke here Monday. The court room was well filled, many being unable to find seats and were forced to stand. Mr. Lewis before he entered the rostrum had convinced all who met him that he was a high toned gentleman of a genial disposition and pleasing manner. His speech was just what it should have been. It was not delivered boastfully, or with the intention to deceive or mislead. It was spoken in a pleasing way throughout. While it was interspersed with pleasant remarks, it was by no means light or flippant. He dealt largely and effectively in facts. The tariff question was handled with consummate skill and to the entire satisfaction of his audience. The Democracy was terribly arraigned for its inconsistency and insincerity in dealing with this most important issue. Altogether Mr. Lewis gave entire satisfaction to the party in the county. He has made friends and votes. He has materially brightened the prospects of Republican success in this county. Breckinridge county will give Lewis a majority in November.

The Kentucky Legislatures have been noted for many things. The last one made no particular reputation for itself. It seems to have attended to the business before it promptly and then adjourned. Its early adjournment, however, was probably brought about by the fact that it was compelled to do so by law. Among the acts passed by it then is one that deserves attention. We refer to an act of February 27, 1894, entitled "Game and Birds." Sec. 1944 reads as follows: "No person shall catch, kill, or pursue with such intent, or have the same in possession after it has been caught or killed any quail, partridge, or pheasant, between the first day of January and the fifteenth day of November in each year." This statute plainly bears the ear marks of the Kentucky Fish and Game Club. The Kentucky Fish and Game Club is composed principally of gentlemen from the city of Louisville, the most of whom are business men. They generally take an outing during the holidays of December. For this reason it is now unlawful to shoot quails save from the fifteenth of November to the first of January. The birds are thereby saved until the gentlemen of Louisville are ready to go out and bag them. We believe in game laws but are not prepared to tamely submit to legislation in favor of the game of the city. Another section under this chapter reads as follows: Sec. 1947: "No person shall at any time catch, kill or take by means of net, trap, box seine, or have in possession after having been so caught, killed, or taken any quail, partridge or pheasant." By reason of this statute a farmer cannot procure a dish of quails for his table from his own farm unless he does so with his gun. The partridge coop and net are therefore unlawful. This statute also is favorable to the city dweller. When the farmers from the cities take their guns and dogs and hie them to the country for quail shooting, they should meet with a warm reception from farmers throughout the State. We use the word warm in the sense of violent, vehement, furious, etc. It would serve them right.

CLOVERPORT.

A Magnificent Audience who "Wants a Change" Hears Hon. John W. Lewis Speak.

Breckinridge County will Give him a Handsome Majority.

CLOVERPORT, Ky., Sept. 11.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN.—A magnificent audience greeted Hon. John W. Lewis, Republican candidate for Congress, at Hartford yesterday. It was not a County Court day and nothing save the speaking to draw so large a crowd to town. He spoke for nearly two hours to an audience that could not have been less than 800—the large court room was crowded, not even standing room left. This fact is given special prominence, as evidencing a great desire on the part of the people for "a change." When even the matchless oratory of a Republican can so well draw in Kentucky, it is certainly a good omen. Mr. Lewis is in a telling way, that is it tells against Mr. Montgomery, the statements made in a little newspaper published at Elizabethtown, that he, Lewis, is dodging and running from Montgomery, that Montgomery can't get a joint debate with him. The truth is, Lewis can't afford to draw crowds for Montgomery and organize his party for him, even if he did not have the good and efficient reasons given to Mr. Montgomery at Hodgenville for not discussing with him.

Mr. Lewis also spoke here last night to a large audience. In his handling of the Wool and Sugar features of the Wilson-Gorham Bill, he is particularly happy. He confined himself entirely to the economic question embraced in that bill, and discusses the whole question, which necessarily embraces Congress from the time it convened in extraordinary session until from sheer exhaustion it went glimmering, from a business standpoint alone. His speeches are free from passion and partisan rancor, and addresses the thought and judgment of the people. Cloverport will give him as big a majority as Blandford got over Gross and probably a larger one. Breckinridge can safely be put down at 300 majority for Lewis.

It is very annoying to Mr. Montgomery and his revenue officers, that Mr. Lewis will not permit them to force him to shake the "bloody shirt" in order that Mr. Montgomery may appeal to the passions and prejudices of the people, while he runs away from the most damnable record any man ever made in Congress. Mr. Lewis shows up his record, which is already written, and no joint discussion could elucidate or explain. Mr. Lewis thinks it a little strange, that with a good chance nearly every hour in the day, for seven years, to have a debate Mr. Montgomery never had a debate, but is now seized with an almost uncontrollable desire to DEBATE. Why? Mr. Montgomery is no debater, he can't even declaim as well as many school boys fifteen years old, he is bound to know that. Mr. Lewis is an orator, he is the peer of any man on the stump in Kentucky. Ah, here it is; Montgomery wants a quarrel, wants something to draw the minds of the people from the purely business questions presented, which stare him in the face with threatening results, wants passion and prejudice aroused to solidify his wants. To do this he would be willing for Lewis to flay him alive and to lacerate him on the sharp points of irony and sarcasm each day in the week if it would injure a little life into his languishing campaign. Lewis will speak at Union Star to-day, and, Providence permitting will address your good people at Hartford on Saturday. A. J.

Pediatric in Use.
Hood's Sarsaparilla is peculiar to itself, in a strictly medicinal sense, in three important particulars, viz: first, in the combination of remedial agents used; second, in the proportion in which they are mixed; third, in the process by which the active curative properties of the preparation are secured. These three important points make Hood's Sarsaparilla peculiar in its medicinal merit, as it accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

But it is not what we say but what Hood's Sarsaparilla does, that tells the story. What Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for others is reason for confidence that it is the medicine for you.

A Teachers' Meeting.
The teachers of Rockport Magisterial District met at Centertown, September 1, 1894. The house was called to order by Vice President G. T. Tinsley. The roll was then called by the Secretary, showing the absence of several members.
Invocation was conducted by G. T. Tinsley.
The subject of "Attention; its importance and how to secure it" was well discussed by A. H. Ross, J. Ham Barnes, Miss Anna Carter and others. Mr. Ross says without you secure the attention of the pupil in your school you will fail to have success. He says the teacher should learn the use of different methods to get them interested in their studies. Mr. Barnes says attention leads all things in the school room, and it is the Golden Key that unlocks the treasure of knowledge. Miss Carter says we should endeavor to point out the benefit to the pupil to be gained by giving attention to their work.

An Original Poem was then read by J. H. Wood.

Under miscellaneous remarks the subject, "How to teach Physiology" was opened by J. C. Barnard. G. T. Tinsley says one of the best ways to teach Physiology is by the use of a microscope, so that the pupil may see what he learned in the text-book. A motion was made and carried to adjourn until 1 p. m. At 1 p. m. the house was called to order by the Chairman. "How to secure regular Attendance" was ably discussed by J. L. Brown and A. H. Ross. J. C. Barnard and G. T. Tinsley gave an interesting talk on Infinitives and Participles. The subject of "Longitude and Time" was opened by A. H. Ross. The subject was further discussed by A. M. Smith. How to teach History and Geography was discussed by M. P. Kimbley, who gave an interesting talk. Miss Myrtle Rowe says she likes the topical method of teaching History and Geography. Opening Exercises were first discussed by G. T. Tinsley. He says that he likes some kind of religious exercise in opening school. J. C. Barnard thinks it is best not to teach and special religious belief in the Opening exercises of the school. J. L. Brown made a few appropriate remarks on the same subject.

A motion was made and carried to elect a teacher for the Reading Circle. G. T. Tinsley was elected.

After the body adjourned the books were distributed among the members of the State Reading Circle.

The following program was prepared—meeting to be called to order at 9 a. m.

Welcome Address—A. M. Smith. Adjectives and Adverbs—G. T. Tinsley, S. W. Taylor, Mrs. M. J. Harper and A. M. Smith.

Would you prevent whispering in school, it so, how?—L. B. Loney, A. H. Ross and Myrtle Rowe.

Recitation—M. P. Kimbley. Benefits derived from The Reading Circle—J. L. Brown, J. H. Wood and Danin Carter.

Percentage—C. Iglehart, P. H. Ross and J. Ham Barnes. Recitation—Lee Chinn.

Physiology; its Importance—J. C. Barnard, Wallace Ross and Florence Newton.

How to teach Primary Reading—Bertha Brown, Muggie Ashby and Alice Loney.

The Association adjourned to meet at High View October 6, 1894.

G. T. TINSLEY, Vice Pres.
J. H. WOOD, Sec'y.

The scrupulous aim which may have been in your mind for years, may be thoroughly expelled by giving Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

[CARTER COUNTY HIGGLE.]
WILLARD.—We see no necessity of establishing an Academy at Grayson. The Willard Normal can furnish any young man or woman with a first-class education; one that will enable them to perform all duties, in a successful way, that are involved upon them, and one by which they may surpass all obstacles. It has always been the object of the Board to employ the best of instructors to take charge of the school, and at present they certainly have them. But as the most important place is that of principal, we shall only refer to the one (Miss Maggie D. Williams) who holds that position. She is a lady, who, in her past life, has always been punctual in her duties, and one who has taken great pride in educational work. Since her graduation at Danville, Ind., she has devoted all of her time to the advancement of pupils. By a long and diligent work she is now prepared to present to them, in a clear manner, all that one would receive were they in college. The branches taught are not confined to those of the common school alone, but any that one desires to study. The building is in a healthy and beautiful place. From it much of the surrounding country, as well as East, Central and West Willard can be viewed, and from its high elevation one is surrounded by pure air at all times. Those desiring to attend school will undoubtedly find it to their advantage to visit this place of instruction before going elsewhere.

Messrs. Maddox & Leach, Livymen of Beaver Dam, lost a good horse Sunday evening. In crossing the railroad near the Section House it fell into a culvert and broke its leg.

ELIZABETHTOWN.

Hardin County Stirred from Center to Circumference by the Live Speeches of Hon. John W. Lewis.

ELIZABETHTOWN, Ky., Sept. 11. To say that last week was a banner one with the friends of John W. Lewis hardly expresses it. His canvass of Hardin county was a perfect ovation. He filled five appointments and at all of them there were large and interested crowds. His audiences at Vine Grove and Elizabethtown were immense. John W. Lewis must certainly be one of those "spell-binders" that our senior Senator sometimes mentions, for his audiences cheered him from start to finish. One thing is sure; an impression has been made, by Mr. Lewis, the effects of which will be keenly felt in his interest next November. For the encouragement of the other counties in the district, let me say that we are going to do our "levellest" in Hardin this time, and our votes will have a big influence in the grand result. It is too soon for Republicans to be casting around for results. Work, work, WORK must be done. We have a shrewd and wily opponent. Don't forget this. Organization, and that a close and thorough one, in every school district must be had. Our standard-bearer is all right; our cause is just, and if we but see to it that every one of our people vote, all will be well. Brag is a good dog, but Work is better. Hardin county occupies a unique position in this campaign; the home of Mr. Montgomery and a very large Democratic majority. Watch out for old Hardin in November. JEAN.

Teach your children to work—to have a purpose in life. ### ALL A MISTAKE.

"A life in which nothing happens." Such had been mine, at least until my twentieth year, when my aunt died, leaving me the handsome house in which I am now living. There was much other property, and no inconsiderable amount of money, besides a pretty little farm twenty miles out of the city. I was, in fact, a rich woman, and what was still better a perfectly free one, and I enjoyed my liberty the first few weeks with all the abandon of an uncaged bird. But as winter came on I grew a little lonely. I had been to my farm, and I found it a wilderness. Not even the pride of possession could reconcile me to its solitude and monotony. I had tried a watering place, and the patronage of some of the servility of others had so wounded and disgusted me that early in September I came back to my home in the city. I found it came plain to me, moreover, that some sort of chaperon was necessary, for though I knew I was able to take care of myself, society did not seem to think so, and I had been continually irritated by the constant proposals of friends to look out for me a suitable person.

But if I was to have an incumbent I was determined to select it myself, and after some consideration I wrote to my old teacher asking her to accept the position. This scheme had its advantages and its drawbacks, as every scheme has, the advantages being that Mrs. Whitney was a thorough lady, a clever housekeeper and quite manageable; the disadvantages being that she had a daughter whom I must also take, and whose position it would be difficult to define.

Mrs. Whitney proved invaluable. My house and housekeeping under her management were models of comfortable elegance; but Rose was something of a trial. She was only sixteen, and she was insufferably vain of her pink and white prettiness, and her youthful bloom. I tried, however, to be kind and just to her, for I clothed her handsomely, and took her with me wherever I went. I was careful, too, to avoid anything which might make her feel her position as a dependent; and for these things I think I deserve credit; for the servitude of one woman to another is generally a very bitter one.

One evening my lawyer called to transact some business with me. He remained to dinner and proposed after it to take us to hear some famous singer. There seemed to be no reason for a refusal, for the night was fine and the moon full; besides, I had no other engagement, so the offer was accepted. As we were going up the wide stairway at Steinway hall, a gentleman accidentally trod on my dress. He stopped a moment to apologize. My friend recognized him and introduced us. I had heard of Frank Ellers before, and had read many of his contributions to various magazines, so I felt no little pleased and excited at the rencontre. His chair happened to be next mine, and our acquaintance made such progress that I made no objection to his proposal to walk home in the clear frosty night.

Next morning he made a formal call, and, indeed, though I don't know quite how it happened—before long, he was always calling on some pleasant pretext or another. How swiftly and happily the winter passed! Every night we were together. At first we went out much, but gradually we fell into the habit of spending the evenings in the quiet, comfortable splendor of my own drawing room.

And so spring came again, and then another event happened. Mrs. Whitney, who had been ailing for some weeks, grew much worse, and the doctor ordered her change of air. So I resolved to send her for a few weeks to my farm; and Frank, with his usual kindness, saw everything prepared for her comfort, and then took her and Rose out there. This was the first break in a charmed length of days which had been all perfect happiness. Everyone knows how one change brings another, and therefore I was more sad than astonished when Frank made an engagement which demanded much of his time, and put a stop to our pleasant evening amusements. Still I lingered in the city, staying at home every night for fear of missing a chance visit from him; and, as time went on, growing half resentful of his long absence, and more than doubtful as to its necessity. One week about the beginning of May I was unusually lonely and weary, for Frank had disappointed me every night, and I could settle to no work, nor yet make any plans for the summer. All the long warm days, and far into the dusky evenings, I sat doing nothing, thinking, thinking, thinking the same soft, and fanciful born of love, and such "silken folded idleness."

Saturday morning I roused myself suddenly. "I will go out to the farm," I said, "and if Mrs. Whitney is able, we will return on Monday, and then go somewhere, anywhere out of New York. If Frank loves me, he will come to seek me; if not, then the sooner I awake to the truth the better."

After breakfast I still held myself to this resolution, and so I arrived at Woodside farm in time for dinner. "Mrs. Whitney and Miss Rose were out," the servant said; "they had gone to the lake, but would be back very soon."

So I went to my room to rest and dress, and being overcome by the heat and fatigue, fell sound asleep on the large old-fashioned couch. When I opened my eyes it was getting dusk and there was a pleasant sound of glass and china and other preparations for dinner in the little house; while toward it, borne upon the wind, I heard coming Rose's light laugh and rippling flow of words. I roused myself hastily and went to the window. Slowly, but merrily, up the little avenue, lined with blossoming cherry trees, came Mrs. Whitney and Rose—and Frank Ellers.

I was almost shocked; and yet, why should I be? I dressed myself slowly and carefully, feeling just bitter enough to make them all understand I was mistress and must be waited for. Then, when I went down, I was sorry I had done so, for Mrs. Whitney and Rose were so glad to see me, and Frank said he "had been up to my house in the drive, and that, finding where I had gone, he made bold to follow."

I asked no questions. I was only too readily satisfied and pleased, though all the evening I noticed Frank was preoccupied and thoughtful. Next day being Sunday we all went to the little Dutch church in the morning and after an early dinner Rose, Frank and I went to the lake. It was a little sheet of water, of small circumference and narrow width, but it was shaded with trees, and in some places of great depth. I do not know what possessed me, but I suggested a sail. The boat lay at the little jetty quite convenient, and Frank took one oar and Rose the other. As for me, I sat and watched the shadows on the lake and on Frank's face, and listened to the while vaguely to their voices, mingling with the sounds of country life and the rush of an approaching train. As it came near, Rose jumped up in her pretty, impulsive way, "to see it shoot in and out among the trees," she said, and somehow—I can't say why or wherefore—but we were all in the water.

Neither Rose nor I could swim. He hesitated just a moment and then he caught Rose. And I heard—well, no matter what it was only two words, but they seemed cruel as a death warrant. I sank twice before Frank could place Rose in safety and return for me, but I did not feel a bit grateful for his efforts just then; for, of course, I knew that if the accident had happened further from the shore I might have drowned while Rose was being saved.

I felt very hard that night, but pride was the shield with which I met this inevitable sorrow and mortification. Both Rose and Frank felt the impossibility of an explanation; acknowledgment was now the only grace left for them. I never asked whether I had been intentionally deceived, or whether in that moment of fearful peril Frank had first read his own heart. I accepted, as soon as I was able, the truth so cruelly forced on me, and I tried honestly to interest myself in the preparation for their marriage.

It was not, after all my sacrifices, a happy marriage. Mere personal beauty can never satisfy a man of capacity and cultivation, and Frank's home soon became an unspeakable weariness to him, his marriage a captivity without refuge or reputation. He became idle and dissipated, and Rose fretted and complained, and once prevailed on me to see and reason with him. Ten years after his marriage Frank died—I don't wish to say how, but I closed his eyes in a public hospital, and promised him there to take his children and love and care for them as my own. For shame as well as poverty had come to his home. Rose had left him three years before, and of her future life oblivion is the kindest notice. There were three children, a girl and two boys, and I found them a rich legacy. They gave me back my youth, my energy and my hopes. I had something to love and care for; some one to provide and plan for.

And the child love once planted in my heart grew wonderfully. These three could not satisfy it. I pitied for their sake every naked suffering little one. My farm has become a home for homeless children, and I have found again my own happiness in making happy these poor "unmothered" walls of sorrow and poverty.

I have done no great deeds; I have written no immortal words, but I have tried to bring sunshine into other lives, and in helping those around me I have helped myself.—Chicago Journal.

HAD A STRING TO IT.
The Harrowing Experience of a Little Dude on a Hot Day.

The young man with the pepper-and-salt suit, the yellow shoes and the straw hat bound about by a varicolored ribbon, was walking just ahead.

He seemed to know that he was made up for display, for he kept looking in at the show windows and pulling down his cuffs. At the corner one of those sudden gusts of wind which seem to come from nowhere blew off his straw hat, and the one with the varicolored ribbon.

He made a grab with both hands, but it was too late. The wind had taken it off his head.

He snatched his hat rolling down the street, traveling on one end. Of course, he was after it.

"Go it!" shouted a policeman.

"Hoory!" yelled the corner newsboy.

The pedestrians found time to stop and encourage him in the chase. But the hat had a long start on him and the wind was holding out. Once he saw the hat topple over and lay on the cobble stones for a moment, then a puff of wind raised it and sent it wheeling along at an increased speed.

He did not hear the jeering laughter of the teamsters. With lips flapping and nostrils distended, he ran, gaining every moment. Once he was delayed. The hat ran under a coal wagon, and he had to go around. At last the hat ran into the curb stone near a corner street lamp, and with a pounce he was upon it.

All flushed and breathless he picked it up, and then he leaned against the lamp post to rest.

A man, also flushed and breathless, came running up, and took the hat out of his hands.

"For what?"

"This is my hat."

"Where's mine, then?"

"Hanging behind you, at the end of the string."

Sure enough, he had forgotten all about his new hat string.—Chicago Record.

HYSTERICAL BLINDNESS.

Slight Out Off by a Quick Flash of Electricity.

A Sudden Recovery—Dr. Raub's Theory—Paralysis—Another Possible Explanation of the Phenomenon—A Question in Psychology.

"As though by a miracle," is the head under which the New York Sun tells of the sudden recovery of sight experienced by James H. Caulfield after three days of total blindness. Caulfield is the Brooklyn reporter who was made blind by seeing the quick flash of a trolley wire.

Dr. Joseph M. Raub, under whose guidance the young man regained his power of vision, said that it was simply a case of hysterical blindness and nothing more. This is unique, if true. There are sure to be, however, many who will combat the theory.

At the Narragansett Electric Lighting company's works in this city, it is said that apparently similar, if not identical, cases have occurred. There are two men at the works who, during the last few years, have been temporarily blinded when throwing a switch. Superintendent Thomas says that this happens in every big electric lighting station in the country. When a switch is thrown the circuit is broken. When properly done, another connection is made simultaneously. The intense flash lasts until another connection is made. One of the men at the Narragansett company's was so nearly blinded that he was at home three days at one time. He was not, however, as is said to have been the case with Caulfield, unable to see anything at all. He was able to grope about, but could see nothing distinctly. Both the men who have been affected at the electric lighting company's works are remarkably strong specimens of manhood, and could not be called hysterical by the widest stretch of the imagination.

In Caulfield's case, with the single exception of drooping eyelids, which might have been caused from lack of sleep, his eyes seemed to be perfect. The feature of drooping eyelids, which exactly with the local cases cited. In fact, that seemed to be the only reason why they couldn't see. In view of this it seems quite possible that the difficulty, in their cases at least, might be called physical rather than hypnotic, which is a term applied to the Brooklyn case by Dr. Raub.

A further argument which would be advanced by those inclined to believe the theory of hysterical blindness is a fanciful one in that the flash, when a switch is thrown, is far more intense than any that could come from the trolley. The switchboard at the Narragansett company's station is now so arranged that in case of a flash there is a marble slab an inch and a half thick between the man's eyes and the exact location of the most intense light. Yet Superintendent Thomas states that not later than two weeks ago he had to turn his back to the slab so powerfully dazzling was the light. It left long enough the marble slab would burn like paper.

It is believed here that the cases mentioned as having occurred at the electric lighting company's are cases of physical inability solely. There has not been the slightest indication of hysteria. If so sudden and intense a shock as must be resisted on the nervous system of these men produces no hysteria, will the theory that a trolley flash could hypnotize a person into total blindness for three days find credence?

Mr. Caulfield says that he "don't believe in hysterical blindness." There are many others who do not. But it is hard telling where physiology ends and psychology begins. It probably won't be told this century, to put it mildly; and Dr. Raub may be perfectly right.

Marlborough's Gifts.

It was characteristic of Marlborough that from apparently small indications he possessed the power of divining the enemies' plans, and was thus enabled to forestall them. From the experience of the recent past he foresaw with admirable clearness the immediate future, and was able, as a result, to keep out coming events from a study of the position at the moment. He could balance future probabilities with strange accuracy, and could fill in with living figures the sketchy outline furnished by the spy.

Without this peculiar gift—one of the instincts that mark the born general—no campaign can be directed with success. To realize what is going on beyond a range of hills, or any other natural barrier to human vision and out of the reach of reconnoitering parties, is one of the problems which perpetually confront the military commander. On the correct solution of that problem depends greatly the success of all military operations.—The Life of Marlborough—Gen. Wolsley.

A DOMESTIC TYRANT.
How the Mother of a Russian Novelist Ruled Her Household.

Ivan Turgeneff, the Russian novelist, was unhappy in having a mother whom he could only fear, and neither respect nor love. She was a very hard and tyrannical woman, and though she herself was rolling in wealth, she allowed her children to taste the drops of poverty because she could not endure to have them independent of her, and allowed them to suffer in order to bend them to her will.

When she learned that Ivan was ambitious to become an author, her indignation knew no bounds.

"Is that a business for a nobleman?" she cried, contemptuously. "I can understand that you might write verses. But to be an author—an author! Do you know what it means to be an author? I tell you. Author and quill-driver are one and the same thing. Both bring in for money. A nobleman should serve the czar, make a career and a name for himself in the army, and not by slinging ink. And who reads a Russian book, anyway?"

"But, mother," Ivan remonstrated, calmly, "why do you speak so contemptuously of authors? You were perfectly well about Pushkin, And then Jonkovsky—you both loved and respected him."

"Jonkovsky!" Well, that is quite another matter. You forget that he was received at court!"

But when she found that Ivan's books, which she herself professed to despise, had been criticised adversely in the press, she flew into one of her tremendous rages, which ended, as usual, with a physician and a noody.

"How," she thundered, "do they dare criticise you—a nobleman and a Turgeneff?"

"But, mother," he explained, with imperturbable good temper, "that only proves that I have attracted attention—that I am not a nobody of whom nobody speaks."

"But how—how is it you attract attention? They find fault with you. They treat you as an imbecile, and you are satisfied!"

Then tears, passionate reproaches, paroxysms of wrath and hasty summons of the family doctor.

But this terrible woman was conscious of her besetting sin, though she did not conquer them. Before drawing her last breath she scrawled these lines on a piece of paper: "My mother, my children, forgive me! And Thou, Lord, forgive me, too; for pride—that mortal sin—was always my cardinal sin."—Youth's Companion.

Lines About the Mouth.
A writer in Blackwood's, who has made a study of facial expression, says that, generally speaking, it is a strenuous contest with minor difficulties that produces a thin and rigid set of lips. It is seen almost invariably, he observed, in the wives of the Martha type, who are careful and troubled about many things, and whose souls are shaken to the center by petty worries with-in doors and strife in a kitchen with the shortcomings of the scullery maid or the cook. It is, therefore, persons of weak will, he argues, who have habitually compressed lips, for the strong will is conscious of its strength, if not agitated by the little worries of the hour. The same writer, after citing the unconscious imitation of all of us in giving back from for frown, and smile for smile, and yawn for yawn, says: "I know a tutor whose peculiarities of speech and carriage have been adopted more or less by every one of his pupils within the last six years, and several of them have come to resemble him in feature." He concludes with the interesting query: "Has it occurred to many careful parents that the good looks of their daughters may depend in no slight degree upon their choice of nurse girl or governess?"

Mixed Perfumes Are Best.

Perfumes, like notes of music, are said to be sweetest when blended. It is not enough to mix together pleasant essences arbitrarily; for that would be no better than drumming on a piano, but certain perfumes may be mixed as are the tones of an instrument. Reference was made the other day to the perfume piano. M. Monard, a French chemist, has arranged in long experience a scale of odors. Heliotrope, vanilla and clematis merge harmoniously; lemon, orange peel and verbena with their variations form an octavo of colors high in intensity, and rose geranium is a half tone to rose. These experiments suggest a new art. A world which has so many composers of music might welcome "composers of perfumes." If the expression may be used. And when after years of study some master of the art produces an essence more fragrant than myrrh, sweeter than violet and more enduring than other he may be called the Wagner of perfumes and will sell his cologne for no one knows how much a bottle.—Rochester Post-Express.

A Summer Resort Tyro.

The youth in white flannel suit, russet shoes, albino pluk shirt and pancake hat, was doing his first time at a summer resort hotel, and he had as his companion something very similar in his make-up, but of three or four seasons' experience at summer resorts. In a burst of confidence after the first week of it, the new fellow called the veteran aside.

"I say, Tom," he said, blushing much and whispering low, "if I tell you something will you keep dead still about it?"

"Sure; what is it?" and the blase youth was almost interested.

"Saw you don't say anything?"

"Of course; I swear. Now what is the great secret?"

"Well, old fellow—this with many blushes and much hesitancy—

"I'm engaged."

"No; you don't say so?" and the veteran smiled.

"Yes, I'm engaged," he nodded cheerily.

"To how many?"

"How many?" gasped the new one. "One, of course; how many did you think, pray?"

The veteran pulled himself together.

"That's so," he said, "excuse me; I forgot that you were only an amateur."—Detroit Free Press.

Skeleton Horse and Rider in a Mine.

Miners cleaning out an old shaft near Silver City, Nev., recently exhumed the skeletons of a human being and a horse. The skeleton of the horse was lying on its back and the human bones were underneath. The latter were covered with the waist and skirt of a silk dress, over which was a lace netting, indicating that the wearer was a woman. The teeth in the skull of the human skeleton are perfect, small and regular.

A portion of the underclothing found is of fine texture. Particles of matted blonde hair on the skull show that the remains are of the Caucasian race. The saddle blanket and skirt are of fine cloth, and the steel portion of the stirrup shows that it belonged to a lady's saddle. The shaft where the remains were found was sunk in 1863. None of the old residents of Silver City remember the disappearance of any person from that locality.
